During a trip we have the habit, perhaps even the instinct, of bringing an object home, something that can bring with it a little of what we live, an object that is more than just a memory, a souvenir. Travel by travel the house becomes a house of memories.

SOUVENIR, the french word for remembrance, is recognized and adopted by other languages as an object that reminds us of someone or something, usually a place. Object whose presence and protagonism were shaken by the industrialization and the influence that it had on the fine arts.

CABANAMad invites a group of artists and designer to interpret their concept of souvenirs and compare them with two artists and some souvenirs from the past
